#BlackLivesMatter #NoRacismNoFascism

The growth of the Black Lives Matter movement has shone a fresh spotlight on the horrific levels of racism in Britain, the US and internationally, and played a major role in the defeat of Donald Trump, the world's number one racist.

This growing, powerful force has the potential to strike serious blows against racism, Islamophobia and antisemitism. With the Coronavirus crisis intensifying, structural racism and health inequalities mean the epidemic is continuing to disproportionately impact BAME communities.

The British government is disgracefully attacking and vilifying refugees and migrants to distract from its failings. It is also attempting to blame Muslim and other communities for spreading the virus, further fanning the flames of racism and putting even more lives in danger.

On 20 March we will come together united against racism, Islamophobia, antisemitism and fascism. We'll stand in solidarity with refugees and migrants to send a powerful message to those in power that racism will be defeated.

20 March: a day of action

On 20 March 2021, UN anti-racism day, events will take place online and in cities and communities around the world.

In Britain, there will be socially distanced protests across the country, including central London.

We will also hold a national online rally, with speakers representing the broad alliance of communities and organisations that make up the anti-racist movement.
